Mr. Peple's New Play.

Mr. George C. Jenkins, writing in the September Broadway, has this to say in regard to the play "Prince Chap," to ap-pear in September, at Madison Square Theories.

regard to the play "Prince Chap," to appear in September, at Madison Square Theatre:

"One of the very interesting productions in September is expected to be "The Prince Chap," which will be put on by W. N. Lawrence at the Madison Square Theatre. This play has been made into a novel by Mr. Edward H. Peple, and published by the Putamus.
"I can state, on excellent authority, that, while Mr. Peple wrote the book, the play is by another hand, the owner of which keeps himself modestly in the background for the present. The dramatist turned his play over to Mr. Peple to be novelized, thus reversing the usual order of things which is to dramatize the novel. How the authorship of the play will be announced, if it is the success expected, I do not know.

"The story of "The Prince Chap" is of a young fellow who finds himself with a little girl on his hands, whom he keeps and educates in the face of many sneers from those who do not understand his high sense of duty. The child is seen in the different acts at various ages. From all that I have heard of the play, it should be one of the most tenderly powerful stage stories New York has had for many years."

Miss Harrison's Story.

Miss Harrison's Story.

By a curious coincidence when, just now, public attention is turned toward the quarantined city of New_Orleans, Miss Norvell Harrison's story in McClure's for September appears under the caption of "The Scarlet Fever Letter," and concerns itself with an episode in the lives of two persons temporarily living in a quarantined hotel.

The story is intended, primarily, to show the extreme folly of marriages of expediency, and the swift retributive justice in store for those who enter into prospective matrimonial engagements from any but ideal and all-compelling motives. Fate, through the agency of a kindly disposed postal cierk, intervenes, however, to harmonize the mismatched threads in the web of destiny for Miss Harrison's hero and heroine, who, in spite of "A Scarlet Fever Letter," are in a fair way to "marry and live happy ever afterward," when they disapper from the reader's range of vision. L.

The story is happily conceived, happily developed and highly entertaining. In it Miss Harrison, who is a daughter of the late Dr. Caskle Harrison, and has her home in Richmond, displays a power in expression and an apiness in subtle suggestion that has already won her highest enconiums from magazine publishers. The sketches for "A Scarlet Fever Letter" are made by Arthur I. Keller, one of the best-known and most alliented of illustrators.

OW in Heaven's name did Columbus get over, It is a pure wonder to me. I protest, Cabot, and Raleigh, too, that well-read rover, Frobisher, Dampier, Drake, and the rest; Bad enough all the same, For them that after came; But in great Heaven's name, How he should ever think That on the other brink

Of this wild waste, terra firma should be, Is pure wonder, I must say, to me.

How a man should ever hope to get thither, E'en if he knew that there was another side; But suppose he should come any whither, Sailing straight on into chaos untried, In spite of the motion, Across the whole ocean, To stick to the notion

That in some nook or bend Of a sea without end, He should find North and South America Was a pure madness, indeed, I must say.

Men were sent to him with instructions wisch it was supposed would result in death. By means of cords they let the prophet down luto a dangeon, an underground envern, a place for the werst eriminals, at the better of the weart eriminals of the king in Jerusalem were of murderous heart. A few remained who had regard for God's minister perhaps because of his aminister, probably he was a black man. He had a darker face, but a whiter heart than these descendants of Abraham who had wrought such wickedness. Of other blood, he was prompted by pity. He went directly to the king whom he was appointed to serve, and, without fear of the consequences, declared that the princes had been guilty of an evil and cruel deed, that they had cast the man of God into a dungeon where he was likely to die for lack of food. No one can refrain from admiration of this man who braved the anger of others to save one from death.

KING COMMANDED (verse 10).—A little manhood remained in Zedekiah. He had not wholly surrendered his prerosentives to a body of princes. If he allowed them a short while ago to put to death a man whose words would weaken the army and discourage the people, he could not support them in an act of high-handed cruelty. He could not turn away the pleadings of a kindly disposed servant for one whose life was in jeopardy. Zedekiah resumed his kingly authority, which he had so shamefully laid down, and liest someone might interpose, he was the king's some under the king's present VIEW POINT—After Joslah, the, good king, came Jehoahaz, the son (2 Chron. xxxvii-2), who occupied the throne of Judah three months. He was succeeded by Ellakim, his brother, whose name was changed to Jehoalakim, who it will be remembered burned the word of the Lord. (Jer. xxxvii-2)-32) It was during his reign that the, Jewish capitivity began, B. C. 606, as predicted by Ellulain in the time of Josiah, Jercellain though his reign that the, Jewish capitivity began, B. C. 606, as predicted the sine of the contempted the sine of the contempted the sine of the world be full the weeping prophet, flourished all through those Iroubidus three of peculiar trial of this godly man. He could not refrain from his work as a servant of the Almighty, although every utterance on his part aroused the bitterest popular clamor against him. Men of less principle or courage would have sliently quitted to obscurity.

FINAL WORDS—Reflecting on the foregoing narrative we may learn the following important truths: 1. The good man often falls into trial because of enemies. This is to be expected in a sinful world. The wicked are over opposed to the righteous. (John xvi33.) Jesus met the same opposition. 2. No man should on this account hesitate in the performance of duty. It is better to die, if need be, in a good cause, than to live by abandoning that cause. We must speak for God whatever the clise queness. 3. It sometimes occurs that our enemies are of our own blood, professing to belong to the same church and to stand for the good of that we love. Let us not be deceived thereby or led from our confidence in God. 4. It sometimes occurs that Triends will be raised up from among people of another race who will have kinder prompilings of heart and clearer visions of right. 5. It may be and it may not be, God's purpose to deliver us from emeiles. If we fall at their hands we must consider that He may be glorified thereby. (Luke xxill:47.)
